SENATOR CALLS FOR JARED KUSHNER PROBE

1 The chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee has called for an investigation into "potentially fraudulent statements and misrepresentations" made by companies promoting investment in a property development involving the family company of White House advisor Jared Kushner. Citing a May 12 report by Reuters, Chuck Grassley, a Republican senator from Iowa, requested a review of claims made by Chinese migration agency Qiaowai and the U.S. Immigration Fund in the marketing of the One Journal Square project in Jersey City, New Jersey, to potential investors in China. Grassley flagged his concerns to the Department of Homeland Security and the Securities and Exchange Commission in a May 24 letter that was later posted on his website. REUTERS

TIGER WOODS ARRESTED, CHARGED WITH DUI

2 Golf star Tiger Woods was arrested early Monday morning and charged with DUI in Jupiter, Florida, as first reported by WPTV West Palm Beach. The Florida native was taken into custody at 3 a.m. and was released at 10:50 a.m on his own recognizance. Once one of the greatest golfers in the game, Woods' career and life have been a mess for the better part of the last nine years.

Beginning with his divorce from Elin Nordegren, it was revealed that Woods was a serial cheater and a sex addict. On the course, he was unable to stay healthy as injuries continued to derail his pursuit of becoming the greatest golfer ever. JOE PANTORNO

EMERGENCY TARIFFS ON SOLAR IMPORTS

3 The United States has notified the other 163 members of the World Trade Organization that it is considering putting emergency "safeguard" tariffs on imported solar cells, according to a WTO filing published. The move raises the stakes in a global battle to dominate the solar power industry, which has grown explosively in the past five years. As production has increased, prices have tumbled, favoring producers who can take advantage of economies of scale. The United States, China and India are vying to be the market leader, and are looking out for any perceived breach of the international trade rules by their rivals. Last September, the WTO ruled that India was illegally discriminating against U.S. solar exports, while India launched its own WTO complaint about solar subsidies in eight U.S. states. REUTERS

ECUADOR SAYS ASSANGE CAN STAY AT EMBASSY

5 Ecuador's new leftist president Lenin Moreno said Julian Assange is a "hacker," making his strongest comments to date against the WikiLeaks founder while still stressing he could stay on in the country's London embassy. Moreno, who was sworn in earlier this month, has broken with his predecessor and mentor Rafael Correa, who had said Assange was a "journalist" and granted him asylum in London in 2012 to avoid extradition to Sweden over rape allegations. Assange, who denies the allegations, feared Sweden would hand him over to the United States to face prosecution over WikiLeaks' publication of thousands of classified military and diplomatic documents in one of the largest information leaks in U.S. history. TRUMP'S AMERICA

Donald Trump hates leaks, really hates 'em, and I'll tell you how I know. He keeps saying so on the Twitter, which is the closest thing we have to a window on the leak-hating president's leak-hating soul.

He hates leaks almost as much as he hates anonymous sources and fake news.

"Whenever you see the words 'sources say' in the fake news media, and they don't mention names," Trump tweeted in his latest double-barrel digital outburst, "it is very possible that those sources don't exist but are made up by fake news writers. #FakeNews is the enemy!"

Take that, you leakers and leakees!

It's not hard to figure what had Trump so steamed. He's just returned from his despot-hugging and bill-collecting trip abroad, where he sucked up to Middle Eastern dictators and harangued America's closest European allies. And wouldn't you know it? His triumphant weekend return was undermined by a fresh batch of anonymously sourced leaks, fingering son-in-law Jared Kushner for secret back-channel communications with the very same Russians who had hacked the election that installed Trump as president.

But wait! When did Trump start hating anonymous sources and leaks so much?

He didn't hate them when he was the one doing the leaking. He didn't hate them in the 1990s when he created a false identity — PR man "John Miller" — to plant flattering stories about his own love life. He didn't hate them when he tweeted in 2012: "An 'extremely credible source' has called my office and told me that @BarackObama's birth certificate is a fraud." He certainly didn't hate leaks during last year's campaign when he begged WikiLeaks to leak Hillary Clinton's hacked emails.

This is a man, don't forget, whose own White House aides constantly go on background to speak with reporters. This man whose favorite rhetorical devise begins with the phrase, "Many people tell me" — followed by an assertion such as "thousands of Muslims celebrated" in New Jersey after 9/11 or "Obama tapped my phones."

And the leaks keep coming, by and about Donald Trump. Only now is it possible to articulate what can only be called the Official Trump Rule on Leaks: Believe no leaks unless you hear them directly from me.

Now go ahead and leak that, anonymous!

Nonprofit pays former gang members to attend college in bid to help end poverty

Boston Uncornered will help gang-involved youth have greater access to opportunity, according to College Bound Dorchester.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Mark Culliton speaks at the College Bound Dorchester gala where Boston Uncornered was announced. ROMANA VYSATOVA PHOTOGRAPHY

To Antonio Franklin, growing up in Dorchester was like being in the middle of a war.

He was surrounded by guns, gangs and violence, and under the weight of negative influences, he soon fell into that behavior himself.

After assaulting a police officer, Franklin served 10 years in jail. He remembers the day he went in, May 23, and how lost he felt.

"I didn't really have any goals, no visions, I felt like my life was over," he said.

But now Franklin has a second chance and he's ready to make it count. At 31, he'll be starting at Bunker Hill College in the fall. In fact, he's getting paid to attend college as part of a new program called Boston Uncornered, an initiative by the nonprofit College Bound Dorchester.

Boston Uncornered officially launched May 18 at a College Bound gala. Franklin was one of about 40 people in the initial pilot program. The program pays a stipend to formerly incarcerated and gang-involved students while they get an education.

"Lots of us want to pursue college, but when you have to choose between helping yourself financially or school, you're going to choose to work … It's hard to juggle both," Franklin said. "With them helping us financially and with our education, it's like killing two birds with one stone."

For Mark Culliton, CEO of College Bound, the new program is not only about helping these specific individuals start a new path in life, but also about a larger goal of ending systemic urban poverty that holds these populations back from pursuing higher education.

"Boston Uncornered is about taking that crew from the corner to college and that process creates community change because they're already the leaders that are pulling young people away from positive choices," he said. "So when they make choice of college, not a crew, young people see that and engage."

Culliton refers to people like Franklin as "core influencers." The goal of Boston Uncornered is to talk to about 900 core influencers, recruited from Boston's most dangerous "hot spots" with the help of the mayor, the police department, gang units, public schools and so on.

College Bound plans to enroll 250 students in college over the next three years through Boston Uncornered. Currently, the funds to pay those involved come from private dollars raised through foundations and individuals.

As former gang members get involved, the idea is that they will go back into those same dangerous neighborhoods to recruit and inspire others to follow a more positive path.

It's not that these people don't want to get an education and do better, Culliton said, but often that they don't get the chance. He hopes more people realize this, saying that another point of the program is about "uncornering our own minds about who these young people are and what they're capable of."

Franklin is already planning to help kids in his community so they don't make the same mistakes he did. He hopes Boston Uncornered grows and helps more people, like him, turn their lives around.

"Everybody deserves a second chance in life," he said. "Don't judge us on our past, on what we went through. Get to know us and you'll see our purpose, what we're trying to become if you just give us an opportunity."

Boston is first US market to offer Britain's Skinny Prosecco

The cult-status sparkling wine is low-sugar and 100 percent vegan.

NIKKI M. MASCALI
@MetroNewYork
nikki.mascali@metro.us

Amanda Thomson's Skinny Prosecco is a cult favorite in the U.K., and the vegan and low-sugar sparkler has landed stateside, with Boston its first stop. PROVIDED

Summer in New England is unofficially upon us, and if that's not enough of a reason to break out some bubbly, here's another one: A beach-body-friendly prosecco that's all the rage in the U.K. has come stateside, and Boston is the first — and only — U.S. market able to pop its cork.

With just 7 grams of sugar per liter and .94 grams of carbs per 5-ounce glass, Skinny Prosecco — which is also 100 percent vegan — has reached cult-level status in its native Britain since launching in 2015. Now Thomson & Scott, the company behind it, has set its sights on America.

"I've always believed that your country was the most exciting of opportunities for me, but I'm not silly — I knew that if I could make it in London, I could create the perfect springboard," founder Amanda Thomson told Metro last week.

She opted for Boston to kick off the U.S. launch because its residents are "wonderfully educated, and there's a lot of interest in what you consume."

A lifetime of being mindful of what she consumed, thanks to her no-sugar childhood, is what made Thomson leave the world of journalism.

"I fell in love with the romance of champagne, it always put me in the perfect mood," she said, but as she learned more about the industry, she realized that "ultimately winemakers can add, and sometimes have to add, a number of things" to their products.

"In my DNA was this recognition that sugar was not something that should've seeped its way into every food stuff, every medicine, every wine," Thomson said.

She moved her family to France after finding a teacher to study under and spent a "good year" building the Skinny concept, tasting wines, visiting vineyards and learning all she could while building her "tribe of believers" through social media — which is continuing with the brand's launch in Boston.

"We've had people share images on Instagram from Cape Cod and Martha's Vineyard, so we're dotted all around, but judging by the orders, it won't take us long to be everywhere," Thomson said.

Skinny Prosecco is currently available at Sonsie in Back Bay, retailers across the state and will soon be found in hotels and bars across Boston.

Thomson is locking down Skinny Prosecco's next U.S. move, with New York, California and Miami on the radar.

Since sparkling wine has become a popular mixer, we got Thomson to share her favorite cocktail with Skinny Prosecco.

"Chuck your favorite fruits in a blender, make it like a puree, swirl it on a glass and chuck the Skinny Prosecco in and put your favorite fruit on the side," she said. "It's the quickest cocktail in the world — and there's no added sugar."

Scandal! Joaquin and Rooney held hands in public

Joaquin Phoenix just won a very important Best Actor Award at the Cannes Film Festival.

But more importantly, he and girlfriend Rooney Mara kind of made their debut at the closing ceremony. So let's just focus on what's important, eh?

First there was nuzzling.

Vulture reports that "You Were Never Really Here," the film that earned Phoenix his golden-leaf prize, premiered at 10 p.m. the night before the awards, and they'd seen "Joaquin nuzzling Rooney's neck as they headed home around 2 a.m." Nuzzling isn't so bad as canoodling, but it's still pretty bad.

Then there was the smiling and the chatting.

People reports that Mara, 30, and Phoenix, 42, were smiling and chatting throughout Cannes' closing ceremony, which kind of seems rude because like, should you guys even be talking during a fancy ceremony? The magazine has the sordid details. "At one point, the actor was even seen resting his hand on Mara's leg."

Woah, woah, woah! Save it for your special alone time, guys.

They also reportedly shared a "warm embrace" and held hands once. Scandal!

In closing: Things are getting serious, or whatever!

And that has been the requisite update on … Roonquin? Joaquiney? Neither of those are very good, but I'll workshop it.

Kim Kardashian also knew her marriage to Kris Humphries was doomed

Kim Kardashian showed up to "Watch What Happens Live!" to talk about Kris Humphries and it's all about as obvious as you suspect.

"I just thought, 'Holy s—, I'm 30 years old, I better get this together. I better get married,'" Kardashian said. "I think a lot of girls do go through that where they freak out thinking they're getting old and have to figure it out, all their friends are having kids. It was more of that situation."

The marriage — which Kardashian lovingly referred to as "that um, last marriage I had," lasted for 72 days. And as far as this gossip writer believes, was maybe set up as a publicity stunt by Mama Kris. Conspiracy theory!

Anyway, the "Keeping Up with the Kardashians" star admitted to Andy Cohen that she knew pretty immediately that the marriage wasn't going to last. "But I knew, [by the] honeymoon it wasn't going to work out." So yeah, not immediately after exchanging vows,

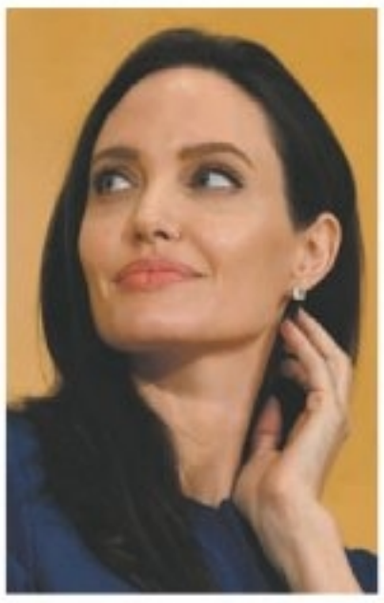
Angelina Jolie wishes her mom was here



Angelina Jolie recently talked to Elle France about her divorce and her late mother, Marcheline Bertrand. Basically, she's wishing her mom was here to guide her through the whole painful divorce thing. Aw.

Jolie's mother had some experience with divorce herself, having split from Jolie's father, Jon Voight, when the "Maleficent" actress was just a toddler. And maybe she's the only divorcee Jolie knows, or maybe it's just a mother's love, but dang, she wishes her mom was around right about now. "I would give anything for her to be with me at this time," she told the magazine. "I've needed her. I talk to her often in my mind and try to think what she might say and how she might guide me."

Things have been tough for Jolie after her split from Brad Pitt. While the 53-year-old has been out gallivanting around promoting "War Machine" and his new sculpting hobby, Jolie is over here taking care of the children and waxing poetic to outlets in France.

Here's hoping Jolie will give us another tiny morsel next month, too.

Rachel Lindsay talks about diversity finding her forever

Rachel Lindsay, star of "The Bachelorette," a show about a bunch of slightly unhinged people looking for love, is opening up about this season, and what we can expect. She really does say words!

In an interview with The Hollywood Reporter, the 32-year-old dishes on this season's overall theme: diversity! Someone give the ABC execs a pat on the back for realizing the year is 2017! "Yes! I am fortunate, if you see the first episode, to have a very diverse cast," she says. "So you will see more diversity go a longer way through my journey."

"Race didn't play in as a factor when it came to choosing men along the way," Lindsay continued. "In my final decision, I just went with my heart and the person I found my forever with." OK!

She does have a ton of hot dudes to choose from. Like the hot guy who looks like Disney's Prince Eric. And sure, there's a guy who looks like Richard Spencer, and some sort of actual voodoo doll named AJ. But there's Prince Eric!

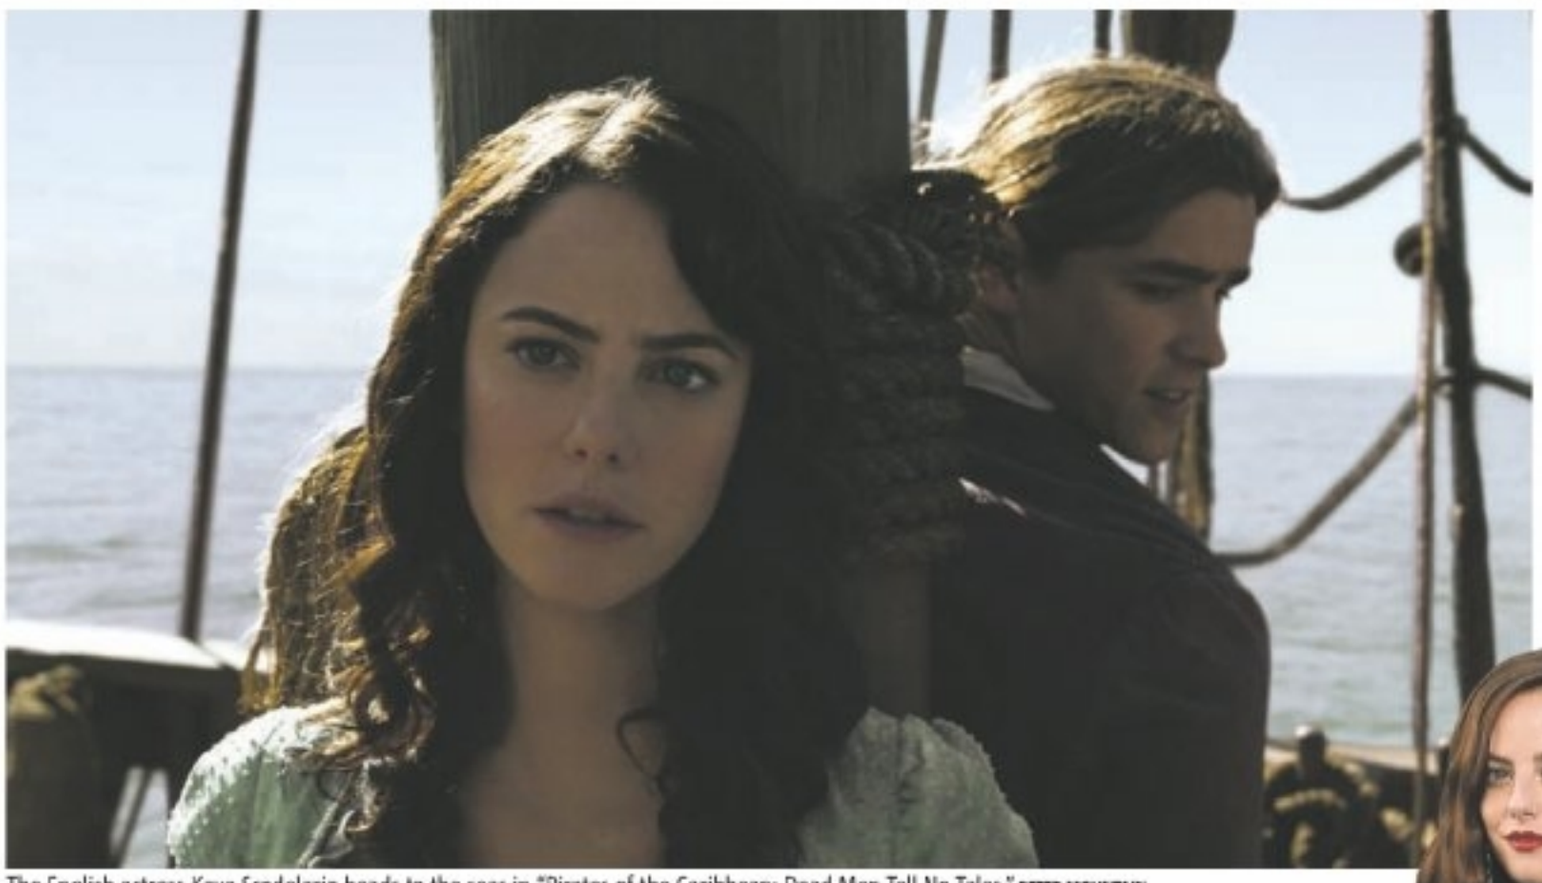
Meet the strong heroine in 'Pirates of the Caribbean'

Kaya Scodelario says she's doesn't know a single woman who is boring.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us



The English actress Kaya Scodelario heads to the seas in "Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Men Tell No Tales." PETER MOUNTAIN

Kaya Scodelario doesn't do boring female characters. Instead, the women she's played are strong, fascinating and flawed. The 25-year-old English actress made her name on the TV show "Skins" and then as Catherine Earnshaw in Andrea Arnold's gritty take on "Wuthering Heights." She then graduated to "The Maze Runner" YA series, and now "Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Men Tell No Tales." In the latter, Scodelario plays Carina, a fierce young women mistaken for a witch because of her love of science and astronomy. She winds up joining Johnny Depp's Captain Jack Sparrow on his latest adventure: trying not to get killed by an old nemesis (Javier Bardem) hellbent on revenge.

We talked to Scodelario about why women are superheroes, how corsets suck and why she adores "The Terminator"'s Sarah Connor.

Your character in "Pirates" isn't a damsel in distress. She's almost as angry as Catherine from "Wuthering Heights." She's an interesting, complex character.
That's something I always look for in all my roles. I don't know a single woman who is boring. We're not simple, we are hard to pin down, you can't define us by one thing. It's important to represent that on film, especially with something this huge. I wanted to make sure we understood that Carina is layered. She's a survivor, she's independent, she's got her own personal mission. She thinks the pirates are a bunch of idiots, and they probably are.

Were there female heroes in big movies you looked up to when you were younger?
I watched the "Terminator" movies when I was really young. I was obsessed with them. I always loved Sarah Connor. In "Terminator 2" — which is probably the best sequel to anything ever — she's fighting for what she believes is right. There's a huge moment where she has to make a decision to kill the guy she knows will ultimately cause Skynet to go live — I'm such a nerd about "Terminator," sorry [laughs] — and she has to make a moral decision. I loved how strong she was, I loved that she kicked ass, that she was muscle-y. Then she's also a mother. She's the kind of character I always look to for inspiration when I'm doing these action movies.

It's neat that both this film and "Wonder Woman" have scenes where the female lead complains about having to do action stuff in gigantic period dresses that are wholly impractical for running and fighting. How was doing that?
It's insanely hard. I thought a corset would be cool to get dressed up in, but actually it sucks. I had a running bet with the camera crew that I'd make them all wear corsets, so they'd know what I'd been through for six months. And none of them did it. They all wimped out at the last second. We do have this great moment when Carina has to swim for her life. So she takes off her dress, because it's going to get in the way. We make jokes about it, but she's actually being incredibly practical. I always find it ridiculous when a girl goes through a long action set piece, and she's got lip gloss on at the end. Because I can't keep my lip gloss on for more than an hour.

'The Handmaid's Tale' should maintain its women-centric focus

Why the women's perspectives are the only ones that matter.

RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS

The long-suffering women of Gilead. ALL PHOTOS GEORGE KRAYCHYK/HULU

"The Handmaid's Tale" had a very strong start. The pilot of the Hulu series, starring Elisabeth Moss as Offred, immediately immersed its audience into the patriarchal and authoritarian regime of Gilead. We started from Offred's perspective, with exclusive access to her daily, internal struggle narrated with her own sly, clever commentary. But after this week's episode — which focused on Luke, Offred-née-June's husband — it seems that the "The Handmaid's Tale" is stronger when its story focuses on the women of Gilead.

At the end of last week's episode, Offred discovered that her husband was still alive. This week, we were taken from Offred's perspective and given over to Luke's.

It makes sense, plotwise: Luke's journey shows what really happened when he was separated from June and their daughter, Hannah. Wounded by a shotgun but still alive, he meets a crew of misfits and escapes to New America — a refugee camp in Canada.

Luke, as a character, is fine. Somehow, he manages to pull off Harry Potter-style glasses like nobody before him, except for Harry Potter. But despite O-T Fagbenle's stirring, approachable performance, his perspective isn't particularly moving.

There's no denying that his role in Offred's story is important. But it's just that — "The Handmaid's Tale" is Offred's story. It's the story of women grappling with a new reality and what that reality means. And though Nick and Luke and the pristine letters from The Commander's Scrabble board contribute to Offred's story, the series does better when it explores the perspectives of the women who suffer at the hands of Gilead's laws.

Elisabeth Moss

Even Serena Joy's outlook in the sixth episode was not without its merits. Again, it was about a woman parsing her way through a new way of life — but from the perspective of someone who was complicit in the creation of this society. But somehow the last few episodes have started to veer away from the casual horror of these women's lives. Lately, the series seems to be making the point that Gilead is not so great for the men, either.

In its best form, the Hulu series is a mirror for how powerless women can be in the real world. So why should the audience care about the men, when they have been utterly complicit in the enslavement of women?

This ought to be a show that's about women. A show about overcoming a system that is terrifying in that it's not that intangible. And while it's important to explore the world of "The Handmaid's Tale" beyond Offred, it sometimes seems as if the show has forgotten about the long-suffering women — the handmaids, the so-called "gender traitors" and Moira, wherever she is. The strength of the series, is its profound focus on the perspective of its women.

'Hamilton' star joins Boston Pops Fireworks Spectacular

Leslie Odom Jr. will perform at the July 4 show.

July 4, 8:30 p.m. to 11 p.m., DCR Memorial Hatch Shell, 47 David. G. Mugar Way, Boston, free, bostonpopsjuly4.org

The Boston Pops are putting an emphasis on the stars part of its Stars and Stripes celebration for July 4 this year.

The orchestra revealed on Thursday that "Hamilton" actor and singer Leslie Odom Jr. has been added to the Fireworks Spectacular lineup, joining previously announced musical guests Melissa Etheridge and Andy Grammer. The holiday show will be the Tony and Grammy Award-winning performer's second appearance with the Pops in 2017 following a pair of performances in June at Symphony Hall.

The man behind Broadway's version of Aaron Burr won't be the event's only big highlight, as the Fireworks Spectacular will also feature the world premiere of "The Sum of Us." The orchestral piece is a new work composed by Tony winner and lyricist Jack Feldman, as well as musical-theater icon and frequent Walt Disney-film-score composer Alan Menken.

While this year's show will be the first since longtime executive producer David Mugar stepped down in 2016, the Pops plan on maintaining many of the event's beloved traditions. Fighter jets will once again take part in a military flyover during the opening performance of the "Star Spangled Banner," and Grucci Fireworks will organize the 20-minute pyrotechnic extravaganza for the show's explosive ending.

Additional performances include musical appearances by the U.S. Army Field Band and Soldiers' Chorus, plus patriotic locals like the Middlesex County Volunteers Fifes and Drums. The orchestra will also play selections from their recently released album, "Lights, Camera...Music! Six Decades of John Williams," in honor of the former Pops conductor and legendary composer.

Leslie Odom Jr. will celebrate July 4 in Boston.

If you plan on attending this year's July 4 festivities, make sure to get to the Hatch Shell early, as crowds of more than half a million people usually visit the Charles River Esplanade annually for the big bash.

Vialé makes a splash with Polar seltzer cocktails

The Central Square restaurant debuts its new summer drinks this week.

SARAH SWEENEY
letters@metro.us

Forget ramps, heirloom tomatoes and even those funky morels — sourcing local ingredients for your seasonal menu now includes a common item found down at your local bodega. It's Worcester's own Polar seltzer, and it's making a splash on the summer cocktail list over at Central Square's Vialé.

Restaurant co-owner and beverage director Mark Young was inspired to create a bevy of fizzy new cocktails after perusing Polar's summer lineup at the grocery store. "I'd known Polar's popularity and its cult following, and I thought it'd be a fun thing to do," he says. "We're a serious restaurant that doesn't take ourselves too seriously."

Try the Green Hill Collins cocktail.

And with Polar flavors such as Watermelon Margarita and Raspberry Rosé, a cocktail venture was almost inevitable.

For his menu, Young conceptualized each drink to highlight the seltzer's individual flavor while complementing it at the same time. Raspberry Rosé became the base for a dry, citrusy rosé concoction that Young has dubbed Quinsigamond Sangria — with all the cocktail names leading back to Worcester.

"I Googled a map of Worcester and just started poking around," he says.

In Young's hands, Polar Watermelon Margarita is the foundation for the dangerously drinkable Hopeville Margarita, with a touch of muddled cucumber. Other favorites include the Salisbury Spritz, a prosecco-driven drink with Aperol, blueberry-infused Cocchi Rosa and Polar Mango Berry Seltzer.

But this isn't the first innovative offering from Vialé. Earlier this month, the restaurant launched its first "Get Down" — a pop-up series that kicked off with a menu of avant-garde lobster dishes in partnership with local gems Snappy Lobster and Castle Island Brewing Co. Chef Greg Reeves is already plotting the next event, tentatively slated for midsummer.

Until then, Young will roll out his seltzer cocktails one at a time beginning June 1 with the Green Hill Collins featuring Polar's Strawberry Sunrise Seltzer.

Prosthodontists take dentistry to the next level

LEARN ABOUT THE TOP CAREERS OF 2017

These specialists are leading the way with technology.

SARA FEINSTEIN
letters@metro.us

Prosthodontists make smiles look beautiful and function the way they should. ISTOCK

Often the "architects" of a dental treatment plan, prosthodontists collaborate with general dentists and other professionals to develop a strong method for restoring and replacing teeth. After years of highly specialized training in procedures and the latest technologies, they are well-equipped to handle the most intricate of dental issues.

We spoke with Dr. Frank J. Tuminelli, the past president of the American College of Prosthodontists, to find out more.

What does a prosthodontist do?

These specialists do everything from putting an implant bridge or veneers on a patient's missing teeth to completing a complex full-mouth rehabilitation. "I like to call them the Michelangelos of dentistry."

What schooling do you need?

After finishing undergraduate studies, those looking to enter the field need to complete four years of dental school. Then comes an additional three to four years of specialized training in prosthodontics. "If you're accepted to a university-based program, you go straight from dental school into a prosthodontic program, which is three years long," he explains. "Hospital based programs, however, require students to first do a general practice residency before they apply, so going that route would take four years."

What's the typical salary?

The median annual salary for prosthodontists is $168,140, according to the most recent reports by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The best-paid in the profession made $212,600, while the lowest-paid made $74,990.

Is it hard to find employment?

"It really depends on where," says Tuminelli. "If you take a market like New York City or Los Angeles, where there are already a high concentration of prosthodontists in practice, it might be a little bit more difficult to break in as a solo practitioner."

But that's not always a bad thing, considering a lot of young prosthodontists aren't always interested in opening up their own office, he explains. "Oftentimes, they start off by working in a general-practice office performing the complex procedures for dentists— and there's a need for them there."

The Bureau of Labor Statistics projects an 18 percent employment rise between 2014 and 2024, driven in part by the boomers who need to undergo complicated dental work as they age.

The pros

"The most rewarding part of the job is the fact that you actually change people's lives," says Tuminelli.

"In a very short period of time, you can take individuals that are socially inhibited because of their teeth and restore their smile, confidence, and improve the quality of their life."

Prosthodontics also sits at the forefront of technology, he continues, "so there's always something new to learn."

The constantly evolving landscape — the process of making dentures, which once took weeks, can now be digitally designed in one day — makes for a continuous intellectual challenge.

Summer workouts to get you pumped

Boston-based trainer Jenn Menzer says she now trains the majority of her clients remotely via laptop or tablet. ISTOCK

Get ready to sweat.

KATE MOONEY
kate.mooney@metro.us

After a long winter spent on the elliptical at the gym (likely while watching the apocalypse unfold on CNN), you're probably feeling uninspired by your typical workout routine — and stressed out enough about the world that you need to blow off more steam that usual. To give you some fresh ideas, we spoke with trainers from top gyms and studios to find out the hottest fitness trends for the summer.

Anytime, anywhere workouts

"What I'm finding to be the big buzz is a return to body-weight training," says trainer Jenn Menzer. "Workouts you can do anytime, anywhere with no equipment. Think squats, lunges, burpees, mountain climbers, dips, planks, pushups." More and more clients are also training from the comfort of their living rooms or hotel rooms — wherever's convenient, she says. "I train clients for strength, pilates and yoga, all through remote training with a laptop or tablet."

Part of the premise of the ever-popular high intensity interval training (HIIT) method is that all you need is your body. "You can do it anywhere; you can take what you learn in class on vacation because you don't need any equipment,"says Adam Sanford, whose classes at his eponymously named studio take "an athletic approach to dance cardio," incorporating both HIIT and body resistance work.

Yoga gets unconventional

From beer yoga to hip-hop vinyasa, there is no one way to get your asana on the mat. At YogaSpark, a hot power yoga studio, classes are offered under blacklight — wear white or neon, and you'll glow throughout the poses.

"I think a lot of people say yoga is getting away from the traditional, but I think it's becoming more accessible," says Julia Yarwood, a yoga instructor and manager at YogaSpark. "[The result is] more people get their yoga in, in their own way. The different takes draw in more and more people, but they still come away with a lot more mindfulness, breath control and body alignment — benefits associated with yoga for centuries."

And yoga doesn't have to be confined to the studio — after all, you can roll out your mat anywhere. Outdoor classes are popping up at scenic locations, from parks to wharfs to rooftops, that pair your poses with a view.

Group fusion classes

Fitness mash-ups are all the rage. "With fusion, you get two classes in one workout," explains Maryann Donner, the vice president of Group Fitness Programming at New York Health & Racquet Club. "Summer is a busy season and fusion classes are fun, dynamic, and bring the sweat on fast!"

Popular options include PlyoJam, a dance class fused with intense plyometric training (essentially, interval work that focuses on jumping); or Tread and Shred, a circuit-style training series which includes treadmill and weight training intervals.

At YogaSpark, clients do their poses under blacklight. INSTAGRAM, @YOGASPARKSTUDIO

Equinox Gym's newest endeavor, Project, allows trainers to design their own classes, which often include creative combinations. Trainer Kirsty Godso leads a combo HIIT workout followed by an advanced regeneration session from yoga instructor Leah Kim. "Because the classes are combined, Leah can tailor the stretch and yoga flow to specifically focus on key movements and exercise from the HIIT workout," explains Godso. "Guests have been loving the combination as it not only promotes advanced recovery, but is a beautiful, relaxing way to wind down after a busy day."

Spinning: It's lit

It's not enough to just get on the indoor bicycle and pump; more and more classes are providing entertainment as you ride. At ImaxShift, riders pedal to the backdrop of music videos or outer space on the big screen. At Crank NYC, lead instructor Amanda Margusity says it'' also changing with the season.

"With summer music festivals on the horizon, we're noticing our riders want a live music experience, so we're kicking off a new live DJ class to satisfy this demand," she says. The class will be a fun, immersive and interactive atmosphere with glow sticks & other festival-inspired items." Spinchella, anyone?

Could the Celtics possibly trade Isaiah Thomas this offseason? It's unlikely, but it is just one option that Boston could go with over the summer as they attempt to evolve into legitimate championship contenders. GETTY IMAGES

TRADE ISAIAH THOMAS? DRAFT MARKELLE FULTZ? WHAT WILL THE CELTICS DO?

@burke_metro

The most interesting offseason in the history of the Boston Celtics is nearly here.

There are so many different routes that Danny Ainge can take, and we'll highlight a few here.

Plan A: Go for it all

When the Paul George and Jimmy Butler rumors were flying around the trade deadline in February, the Celtics were unable to offer the No. 1 pick in the 2017 NBA Draft because the lottery had not occurred yet. Now that it's a sure thing, Ainge holds all the cards when it comes to a potential deal for George or Butler.

The big question here is, does Ainge think that George or Butler are good enough alone to propel the Celtics into Golden State-Cleveland territory? I would say no.

Ainge is the definition of a go-big-or-go-home GM, and he knows full well that just adding one of those two to the team wouldn't be enough. It's why I believe you can't rule out Ainge potentially trying to get both George and Butler. They'd have to give up both Nets picks, some of their own future first rounders and key players like Avery Bradley, Marcus Smart and possibly Jaylen Brown — but a team that can start Isaiah Thomas, Al Horford, Paul George and Jimmy Butler is one that could hang with the NBA's Big 2.

Plan B: Stay the course

The most conservative plan, and the one I'm most in favor of, is drafting Markelle Fultz at No. 1 and pushing hard to sign Utah free agent and former Brad Stevens pupil Gordon Hayward in free agency. The C's should also attempt to sign Isaiah Thomas to a new contract this summer and hope that he and Fultz can coexist on the same floor. That's not out of the question as Fultz is 6-foot-4 (6-foot-5 on a good day) and is the definition of a combo guard.

The Celtics haven't been in a position to draft someone this talented since taking Len Bias No. 2 in 1986 (Paul Pierce fell to them at No. 10 in 1998), so they should just go ahead and make the pick.

The last time the Celtics had a championship-level team, it was of the quick fix variety. The Pierce-Garnett-Allen trio had a window of about four years. Fultz could be one of those rare players who gives the Celtics a title window of 15 years. You simply can't pass that up.

Plan C: Take a step back

No one will like this plan, but you'd better believe it's on the table for Ainge.

The Celtics could potentially draft Fultz and trade Isaiah Thomas for future assets. They could allow Fultz to grow as the centerpiece of the next great Celtics team and they could also wait out LeBron James' prime and hope the Warriors have some sort of divorce.

In 2020 or so — all assuming Fultz pans out — the Celtics could then look to assemble their own superteam.

Which way will they go?

I believe that right now there's a 40 percent chance Ainge goes with Plan A, a 40 percent chance he goes with Plan B, and a 20 percent chance he goes with Plan C.

What made that 2013 Nets heist possible is that Ainge is a master at waiting for an offer he can't refuse. If some team is dumb enough to give Ainge the world, he will pull the trigger.

If the offers he receives for the No. 1 pick aren't strong enough, then he will pass and simply pick Fultz.
